Josh Green grew up in Pennsylvania, studied anthropology at Swarthmore College and received his medical degree from Penn State University in 1997. After working in a missionary hospital in Africa and completing his family practice medical residency, he came to Hawaii to work as the National Health Corps doctor in Kau. Dr. Green is currently the Medical Director of the Kona Salvation Army Clinic and for two years has served as the chief of staff of the Kau Hospital. He now hopes to serve the people of Hawaii in the State House of Representatives, using his expertise and training to solve problems related to the Ice Epidemic, health care access for all people and the critical issues related to development in Hawaii.
